Kindergarten

We have been busy learning many new things in Kindergarten! As readers, kindergarten students are learning small group instruction routines and expectations, as well as building their independent reading stamina. We have spent a lot of time telling true stories from our lives in writing. Kindergarteners are learning to plan and write the words in these stories. They are also retelling and rereading their stories to remember the important parts. Currently in math, students are exploring composing and decomposing numbers to deepen their understanding of numbers to 20. In our next chapter, mathematicians are going to be introduced to the concept of size. They will compare a variety of items by height, lengths, and weight.

Involve me and I learn.”
